Thursday, January 24, 2008

Oomph, death march and that voice: perfect

J O R N E Y
B O O K

Open House Soup Kitchen, January 23 Review by Ben Easte

ACCORDING TO ARMageddon, the Sydney Opera House was meant to be a visual feast. If that’s the case, the Opera Kitchen failed to manifest the divine. Its menu of cold soups was not terrible, but it was not the culinary equivalent of the Holy Grail. It would be nice to imagine that the Opera Kitchen has the potential to be a lively place for people to gather and eat. But that’s not the case. This place is more like a service station with a kitchen than a real restaurant. The food was also standard and uninspired. The staff was friendly, but the overall experience was disappointing. The Opera Kitchen is a missed opportunity, a chance to create a unique and memorable dining experience.

The Sydney Morning Herald

Traveling to Australia day celebrations by public transport

The best way to get to Australia day celebrations is by public transport. Catch a bus, ferry or light rail for quick and convenient travel around Australia during the city. Remember, large crowds are expected to travel early and allow plenty of time for your journey.

To find out up-to-date information including timetables and travel tips, visit www.131000.info or call The Transport Information on 131 500.